Chapter 1

Introduction

This is a list of kamatz katans in the Torah. The list was generated using a Python script from the "Miqla According to the Masora" project. While it was reviewed and checked manually, the checking process was not very in-depth, and it likely contains errors. Please report errors found by submitting an issue report in the github repo here: <https://github.com/nkasimer/kamat-z-katan-list/issues>

The various forms of the word כָּל have not been included because of how common the word is. Special mention should be made, however, of Isaiah 40:12, where the word כָּל has a kamatz gadol and is a verb. Because kamatz katan (like all Masoretic vowels) is purely a phenomenon of the text as vocalized, not the written text, the list of kamatzes includes only the kri, not the ketiv.

Words where reading traditions vary have been noted. Generally these are words where a kamatz is followed by a guttural consonant which is followed by a chataf-kamatz. Sephardim, following the Radak, pronounce these as kamatz gadol. Others read it as a kamatz katan. The same variation exists for words that, grammatically, usually would have a maqqaf joining them to the following word, but for some reason the maqqaf is missing. Sepharadim follow the Radak and pronounce it as a kamatz gadol, others read a kamatz katan.

This is designed as a quick reference guide. The book "The Ohs and Ahs of Torah Reading" by Rivka Sherman-Gold has a similar guide which inspired this one. While that text is extremely helpful, both in its reference guide and its explanation of the rules for kamatz-types, it is out-of-print and difficult to find. This is intended to fill the gap, in part, from the difficulty in finding it.
